

Dear NOSS members,

The Center for the Analysis of Postsecondary Readiness (CAPR), an Institute of Education Sciences-funded research and development center on developmental education jointly run by the Community College Research Center and MDRC, is hosting its culminating conference on November 21–22, 2019, in New York City.

The conference, titled Reimagining Developmental Education: How Can We Do Better for Our Students?, will bring together a diverse group of researchers, educators, students, policymakers, and other student success advocates to exchange ideas about promising reforms to developmental education. Our goal is for attendees to learn about the latest research in the field, make connections with like-minded colleagues, and collaboratively work toward a vision for the next wave of developmental education reform and research.

CAPR leadership believes the perspectives and experiences of developmental educators are critical to establishing this future vision and welcomes the participation of NOSS members. If you would like to learn more about the conference, please click here to link to the conference website and information about registration and accommodations. We encourage you to register early as we expect the conference to reach capacity.

We look forward to seeing you in New York City in November.

All the best,

Nikki Edgecombe
