Chapter Report: South Carolina Association for Developmental Education

2019 SCADE Conference at a Glance

2019 has been an eventful, albeit unsettling, year for developmental education in South Carolina. In fact, the fate of Dev Ed as we know it remains uncertain as lawmakers propose drastic educational reforms, including removing remediation altogether from our state's community colleges. Undoubtedly, Dev Ed is in need of a comprehensive overhaul if it is to survive intact. Thus, the theme of the 37th Annual SCADE Conference is UNDER CONSTRUCTION - RENOVATING DEVELOPMENTAL EDUCATION.

Like Dev Ed, SCADE itself is also under construction. The website is in the process of being renovated, and even SCADE's name will likely change in the next year to be consistent with NOSS (National Organization for Student Success), to expand the membership base to include staff and faculty in other academic departments and in student-support positions, and to more accurately define our organization and the community of students, staff, and faculty it serves.

The 2019 conference will focus on the transformation of developmental education. We will exchange strategies to improve instruction, share new ways to meet the growing needs of our student population, and explore innovative solutions to the challenges Dev Ed educators continue to face. Participants are encouraged to present best practices in the classroom and to share methods, strategies and research relevant to developmental and transitional educators and learners. Together, we will examine the state of Dev Ed and explore new avenues as we navigate an indefinite future.

Keynote speaker Michael Delaney, principal of Carolina High School and recipient of numerous statewide awards and accolades, personifies SCADE's theme of educational renovation through his progressive, ground-breaking leadership and practical application of his personal motto, "whatever it takes." Mr. Delaney is an electrifying speaker; hearing his account of rebuilding the culture at Carolina High School from the foundation up is a transformative experience in itself. Michael Delaney's methods are always innovative, often surprising, and sometimes unorthodox. Prepare to be inspired and motivated by his educational renovation story.

Join us Friday, October 18, at Greenville Technical College's Northwest Campus, located near Furman University and Travelers Rest, a popular destination on the beautiful Swamp Rabbit Trail. Consider spending a night or two in Greenville, enjoying the scenic northwest part of the city by day and experiencing beautiful, lively downtown after dark.
